

The Society for the Medieval Mediterranean (SMM) was founded in 1997 by Dionisius Agius and from its inception incorporated scholars and individuals from a variety of disciplines who shared a mutual interest in all aspects of the academic study of Mediterranean history and culture, from the fifth to the fifteenth centuries C.E. It aims to foster cross-cultural and inter-disciplinary investigation, create a forum of ideas, and encourage debate on crosspollination within the Medieval Mediterranean.

The Society's journal Al-Masāq: Journal of the Medieval Mediterranean, published by Taylor and Francis, was founded in 1988 and subsequently became the principal output of the Society. Initially it was published twice yearly, with an increase to three annual publications in 2009. Most recently, thanks to the efforts of the former general editor Jo Van Steenbergen it was listed in the Thomson Reuters Arts & Humanities Citation Index. The flourishing membership and the expertise of the expanding editorial board of Al-Masāq are testimony to the society's gathering momentum. This interdisciplinary approach has been at the heart of the society's determination to discuss the Medieval Mediterranean within a historical context: encouraging the pursuit of high quality independent and collaborative scholarship within a defined common cultural framework.

Website: <https://www.societymedievalmediterranean.com/>

SMM Membership

Membership of the society runs for one calendar year (January–December) and it provides a range of benefits including copies of Al-Masāq delivered virtually or to your door, and reduced rates for participation in our conferences.

To join the society, please follow the link

<https://www.societymedievalmediterranean.com/take-action>